

Tennessee Transfer Pathway

To encourage higher education, the Tennessee Board of Regents sought a way to make it easier for students to transfer from a community college to a university. Kay Clark, associate vice chancellor for Academic Affairs, approached the BMC to create an all-inclusive website to make this transition easier for students, families, and counselors. The multifaceted website combines a welcoming design scheme with in-depth information for students looking to make the transfer.

"Working at a university, I've seen first-hand how transfer students can struggle with getting their credits moved from one institution to another. Knowing that I was going to be able to help students statewide have an easier journey when it came to higher education was really important to me. We are able to help them start on day one with the right path. When students have a good experience moving from a community college to a four-year university, which encourages other students to continue on and get a higher degree, basically, we are making education more attainable for transfer students," said Will Nisbet, BMC intern.
